George said there is a house on Tabernacle Street reported to have been owned by Clark Gable. He said the Snarr family also owned it. He said an individual contacted George about verifying that reported history. But George was only able to go back to 1986. Richard said Mike Harless in Washington City has had success in going through the physical records in the Washington County Recorder's office. Ian Crowe said if he is given the ID number he would go in and find the necessary information. Loren Webb recommended going through "Dixie", a County Recorder employee who has been willing to help with those early records.

CLARK GABLE

at home in a small town

While Clark was at work, Kay Gable, who has the knack of getting along with everybody, made herself a popular visiting celebrity in her own right. She spent afternoons on a quilting project with neighbors. In between times, she went shopping; she picked up six dresses for $47, a size 7½ straw hat for Clark and presents for her children. She even mowed the lawn.

5 in early-morning coolness gets the Gables going for a long, hot day.

Kay shops in local stores with maid Louise Jones.
